Rams Beat Hogwarts in Annual Quidditch Match

Evie Kastner, staff writer

Little and Stag fly towards the bluger in the annual quidditch match on Oct. 31 held at the Anoka-Ramsey soccer field.

About 10 feet above the Anoka-Ramsey soccer field on Oct. 31, was the annual quidditch game. The Anoka-Ramsey Rams quidditch team was defending its championship title against the Hogwarts team. The two rivals faced off in a four-hour game with the Rams winning 120 to 90.

As soon as the game started the Rams' star chaser Larry Little scored 10 points. Hogwarts beater Basil Stag played a mean game. Stag directed the bludger towards Rams seeker Harry Hopper numerous times.

About three hours in, the Rams led 100 to 90. The Hogwarts were 10 points away from tying the game. Hopper was getting closer and closer to the snitch to end the game. The Hogwarts beaters were being more aggressive than ever before, trying to get Hopper off his stick.

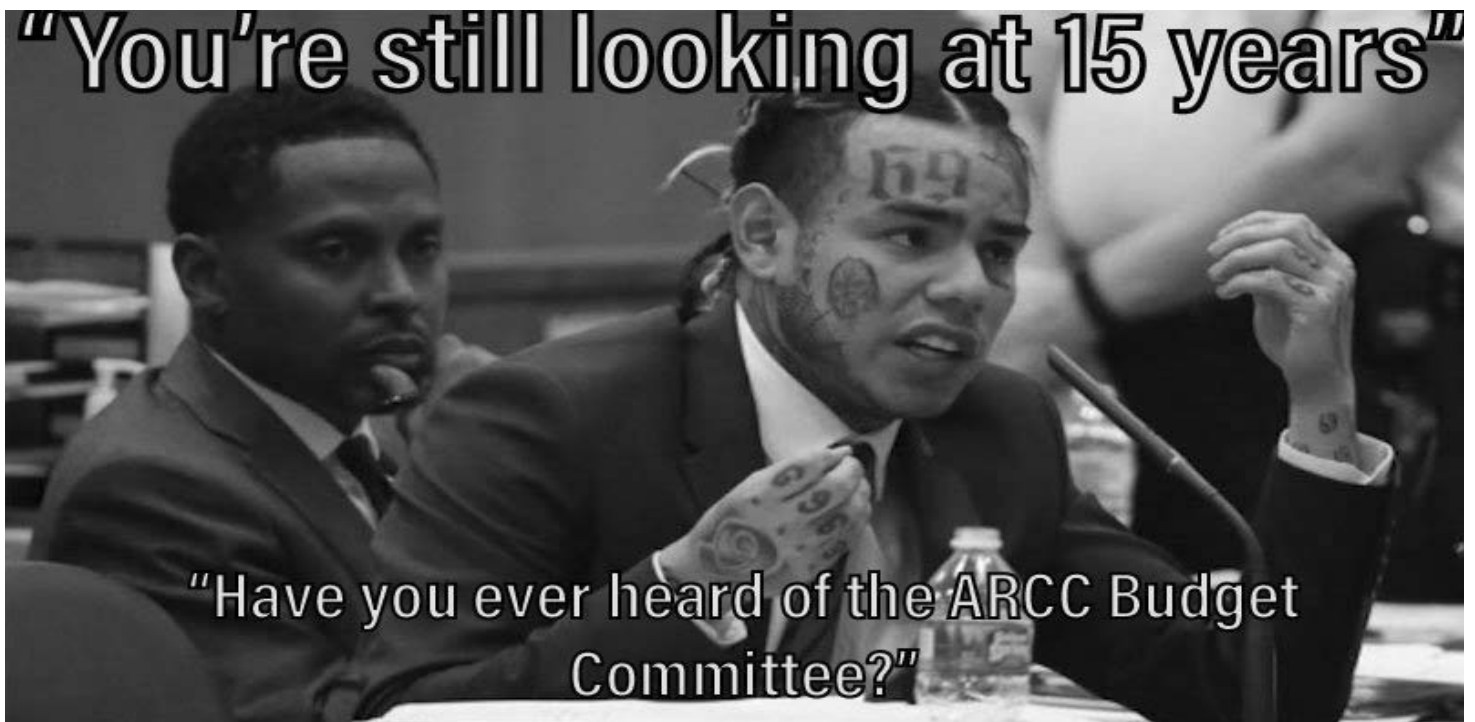

Stag hit the bludger straight at Hopper. The crowd went completely silent as Hopper stood on his broom stick to quickly grab the snitch. Suddenly Hopper was hit and fell all the way to the ground. Ten seconds go by, then 20. There was movement from Hopper. Finally, Hopper stood up and put his hand in the air and there it was; he had the snitch.

The crowd roared in excitement, what an amazing way to end such a long stressful game. The Rams quidditch team retained its championship title.

Top 10 reasons to sell your organs

In a world where students are constantly faced with financial stressors, selling your organs to that guy Damien in the trench coat over in the art wing doesn't sound half bad. Here are our top ten reasons to give Damien your spleen, lung, liver, appendix or whatever else you can spare.

Anthony Erickson and Jonathan Ness, staff writers

1. If you ever want to get into a state university, selling your spleen is the way to go!

2. Ever look through Amazon, depressingly gazing at the things you can't afford? Well by selling your kidney, now you can buy them all. However this limits how much alcohol can be consumed so we personally do not recommend this option.

3. Working with sketchy people now can build your underground connections for your career. How else do you think politicians get so corrupt?

4. As an organ donor, you're already giving away those pricey organs for free. Who cares about that unfortunate spoiled kid who needs a kidney? You just got yourself a brand new Ferrari!

5. Everyone else is doing it, so you should too. Peer pressuring is now being featured in news articles.

6. You won't need to take food from the Campus Cupboard anymore. Leave the good stuff for the rest of us.

7. Damien is single ladies. It's time to mingle!

8. You can finally afford all those pricey streaming services. How can you binge Umbrella Academy without selling a testicle?

9. We told you to do so. And if there's anyone in this world you should listen to, it's The Campus Eye.

10. It's Halloween, live a little. Life is short, and even shorter when you sell too many organs!

The Real Housewives of Transylvania

Anthony Erickson, staff writer

The creators of The Real Housewives are set to make a special Halloween miniseries. The series will star some of the most iconic starlets in all of horror.

"We thought the other season's cast members were all lifeless human beings. Why not keep going? It's worked before," the show's creators said in an email.

We tracked down these famous horror movie characters stars and one real-life horror to find out what motivated them to agree to be cast in the show.

Mrs. Voorhees—The mother of Friday the 13th's linchpin character Jason Voorhees, and probable cause of his mounting psychiatric bills, will be joining the all-out cast. She expressed her silence by repeating over and over, "You see, Jason was my son, and today is his birthday," while sitting in front of a grinding wheel, sharpening an ax. She doesn't need to say a lot for members of the press leave her alone.

Elvira, Mistress of the Dark—Most memorable for her beehive hairdo, gothic dress, and cavernous cleavage, Elvira was the hostess of Elvira's Movie Macabre during the 1980s. On this show, Elvira would present B-Rated horror flicks while offering her dark and sarcastic sense of humor in-between commercial breaks.

She jumped onto the opportunity when she heard Mrs. Voorhees would be a cast member.

She says she wants to understand the secret behind how her son, Jason, keeps returning from the dead. Presumably, to help resurrect her deceased career.

Bride of Frankenstein—

It was hard to understand how the Bride of Frankenstein was really feeling about the opportunity to star alongside all these big named female celebrities, but she sure did scream a lot.

A lot, and it wasn't enjoyable.

But how would you feel if a mad scientist brought you back from the dead to be the inamorata of murderous psychopathic monster?

Countess Elizabeth

Bathory—The terror of 16th century Hungary, who murdered hundreds of women and is said to have bathed in virgin blood to retain her youthful shimmer, is back for a resurgence.

The countess wasn't available for comment, as she has a strict bathing regime. Still, it's been hinted she will be promoting her new cosmetic line, most notably her vanishing cream. That sounds like a recipe that can solve the murder that was done to Angela Lansbury's skin.

Linda Blair—Famous for her role as the possessed little girl, Regan, in The Exorcist, Blair is utterly terrified for taking on this project and has since fired her agent. She was quoted as saying, "The contract is so air-tight that a fart would never pass from it. I don't know if I should bring a gun or Father Merrin. I'm probably going to die." She can do everything, folks, from horror to comedy.

Hopefully everything will be ok, considering everyone in the cast is either fictional or dead, (minus Blair).

Abandoned Anoka state hospital. Image by MattsRadShow

The former state hospital in Anoka is said to be haunted in the tunnel and in the nursing building. Things have happened such as cold air blowing, and mysterious sounds which people had experienced while visiting these areas.

The tunnel may be locked down, but you can go to the Anoka County courthouse and ask if you can see it.

Billy's Bar and Grill in downtown Anoka is haunted on the third floor. A person has reported seeing a lady staring at him from a third-floor window when he was across the street. She waved at him. When he went to get a friend, she wasn't there any longer.

At the Dairy Queen in St. Anthony, workers have experienced things missing and have heard their names called out. They have also experienced cold spots and lights blinking in and out. These occurrences happen the most around closing time.

If you like to check it out, you may have to ask the city for permission before bringing ghost haunting equipment.
