

TSE

THE STINK EYE

Anoka-Ramsey Community College's #1 Satire Newspaper

April 1, 2020 • Vol. 5

“NEWS” POLITICS GAMERS SPORTS

BREAKING NEWS

POOL PLAYERS SHATTER LOUNGE WINDOWS WITH NOISE

Editor-in-Chief:
Ivan Lopez-Kne

Contributors:
Sam Anthony,
Anthony Erickson,
Jake Eik, Finnegan
Kastner

Cover design:
Evelyn Kastner

Advisor:
Dr. Melody Hoffmann

OUR MISSION

The purpose of The Stink Eye is to provide "news" to the Anoka-Ramsey Community College, complete with biases and half-baked conspiracy theories that none of us fact-checked. The newspaper also provides student reporters, photographers, and designers with an opportunity to impose their political biases on others, learn how to make up facts, misuse quotes, and gain experience at the expense of other peoples' reputations.

CORRECTIONS AND CLARIFICATIONS

Don't bother, it's cool.

thecampuseye.com

@TheCampusEyeARCC

@The_Campus_Eye

@TheCampusEye

SEND COMPLAINTS TO:

President Kent Hanson
Anoka-Ramsey
Community College
11200 Mississippi Blvd
Coon Rapids, MN 55433

newswire

LUMBERING EFFORT OFFENDS MILLENIALS

New college course at Anoka-Ramsey inspires ire from millennial students.

Anthony Erickson, Staff writer

Students with beards and flannel shirts said they were uproariously offended at the college's new lumber jacking course which premiered fall 2019. The reason for the offense? Stereotyping.

The idea to create the course developed when the college hired the demographics company ACME to discover new ideas for classes. ACME discovered an influx of flannel shirts along with essential beard oil purchases in nearby areas. ACME later discovered the purchases were due to trend-setting hipsters attempting to appear socially established without acquiring the necessary skills to maintain such a lifestyle.

Dozens of students assembled to oppose the typecasting. Soon after, the course was canceled. Once again, millennials got their way due to enabling and coddling.

The bearded assembly didn't utilize picketing, like one would think, as the ones involved "couldn't even," said student Sully Morose. No one in the group possessed the basic wood-working skills to make them, or energy and interest to purchase pre-made ones from a hardware store.

"Appearances don't matter,

Above, an actual lumberjack, at any actual lumberjack class.

PHOTO COURTESY of the U.S. Air Force

man. Just because I look like a lumberjack, doesn't mean you can judge me as one," Morose said while combing his Old Dutch-styled beard with a sandalwood comb. "I mean, they damage the forests."

What little energy and interest the faux protesters did have was enough to take the issue to the Neutral Opposers Facebook group.

Net surfers have been exchanging their conjecture about global issues such as "Halo Reach" and "Fallout," with this group for years. No comments about the protest have been made there.

Morose, halfway through their AFA in Scowling at the Mention of Menial Labor, has been a student at Anoka-Ramsey for 16

Sully Morose shows Anoka-Ramsey administration where they can shove the stupid lumberjacking course.

PHOTO COURTESY of istoletheTV on flickr

non-consecutive semesters, and has changed majors 13.5 times.

"The students have spoken, and their opinion is important, no matter how undereducated it is," said Course Development Specialist, Chip Lemming.

Anoka-Ramsey President Kent Hanson has yet to comment as he has better things to do with his time, and responding to such a topic would most likely recede everything he has learned throughout his life.

DOODLE AREA

Can you find the story that is similar to the image below? Answer on page 6.

Presidential race takes a tumble, new entrants take a chance

Presidential hopefuls Joe Biden and Sen. Bernie Sanders drop out of democratic nomination race, and new candidates take a chance.

Ivan Lopez-Kne, Editor-in-Chief

All democrats have suspended their 2020 presidential election campaigns this week as Vice President Joe Biden and Sen. Bernie Sanders both expected to fall short. While the path to the presidency is currently on one track, President Donald Trump has entered the race as a democrat hoping to run unopposed in his re-election.

as one,” Biden said. “There is no greater tragedy than allowing Trump to win and cause further harm to this nation.”

By exiting the race, the two presidential hopefuls created a brand-new opening for the sitting president. While trying to stop Trump, Sen. Sanders and Biden made it far easier for the incumbent to stay in office.

all entered the race after Trump, hoping to capitalize on their own name recognition. As of today, Tom Cruise, Post Malone, Tulsi Gabbard and Spongebob Squarepants are all seeking the democratic nomination for president.

“It’s like the deal of the century,” Trump said.

In a near simultaneous fashion, Biden and Sen. Sanders both took to the stage Tuesday morning to announce the end of their campaigns. While they have stayed in a tight race since the beginning of the year, they both have the idea of unifying the party behind a central figure: their democratic opponent.

“In order to defeat Trump, we need to come together and act

“It’s like the deal of the century,” Trump said. The president seized his opportunity Tuesday afternoon and announced his candidacy for president of the United States -- as a democrat. This could be the first time that Americans will have the same name on the ballot twice.

Trump’s success has not gone unnoticed. Celebrities from music, to movies, to animation have

Above left, Sen. Bernie Sanders announces he is dropping out of the 2020 U.S. presidential race. Above right, actor Tom Cruise announces his candidacy for U.S. president at a rally at the Church of Scientology headquarters under the sea.

Smash Players Form Cults Around Their Mains

Passion turns to worship as local gaming community begins to idolize favorite characters

Sam Anthony, Staff Writer

On a foggy rainy day in the Courtyard Commons, figures in various colorful clothing gathered near meticulously crafted sculptures of fictional characters, engaging in various social rituals.

One person had adorned themselves in regal clothing with a large toy hammer, holding a sculpture of a portly penguin that resembled their royal attire high above their head, boasting, “Praise be unto Dedede, the mighty and powerful ruler of this kingdom!”.

They were challenged shortly after by a person wearing a gaudy crown atop their head, as they thrust a figurine of a similarly rotund crocodile into their face and proclaimed, “That is a false king, he has not proven his worth as a ruthless and despicable despot such as K. Rool himself!”

Once more, there was an indignant protest from behind as the self-proclaimed Ambassador of Koopa slammed a statue of their leader onto the table, growling under their breath, “Whosoever hopes to challenge Bowser’s authority, shall face the wrath of the Koopa King himself!”.

As the trio of royal representatives fought amongst themselves, one thing became clear: A cult had formed around characters from Smash Bros., and it had become serious business for those involved.

It had started innocently enough as a small fellowship of Smash players who committed themselves to their favorite characters from the game. Soon, however, interest turned to obsession, and devotion became worship.

It wasn’t enough to represent their characters; they had to seek spiritual guidance and salvation from their idols. For what were their companions without servants to extoll their virtues to others?

Looking around the room, it was darkly lit and populated by numerous cultists performing rituals to worship their main characters from this game. A person clad in dark blue overalls and a green hat was continuously planking their body against the ground, whispering “Pow pow.

Pow pow. Pow pow.” as they addressed a figure of Luigi, lit with green candles and adornments around his platform.

Another individual offered a “Sword of Seals” to a replica of a young swordsman named Roy, and a holy sigil could be seen under the stand. In contrast, a demonic sigil could be seen under Kirby’s trophy stand as his follower muttered an occult proclamation, which mentioned something about “The pink demon’s judgement is nigh”.

While these ceremonies were self-contained, they all had an intense fervor that could only be described as religious.

“King K. Rool” and “King Dedede” posing before turning on one another. PHOTO COURTESY of Highnesspurple on Twitter.

the back page

New CEO, Robot Mickey Mouse, Takes Deal from POTUS for Entire United States

Bob Iger recently left Disney for more creative pursuits. A new Disney head strikes a deal.

Finn Kastner, Staff writer and part-time snail

An AI robotic version of Mickey Mouse is The Walt Disney Company's new CEO, Walt Disney announced last week. Bob Iger, the former CEO of Disney, recently left.

"Iger was a strong CEO, and a great businessman. We are sad to see him go," Walt Disney, as a frozen head, commented.

The Walt Disney Company had been working on a secret project, which was revealed shortly after Iger's departure.

The project, codenamed Project M, was a robotics and AI program that sought to bring Mickey Mouse back to life with goals to lead the company.

"I am excited to expand Disney's horizons farther than ever before huh huh," Mouse said in a statement to the press when he first took over.

Since Mouse's arrival as the new Disney CEO, the company has taken steps to improve the quality of its movies and services.

The first wave of new and improved Disney products include re-remasters of "Beauty and the Beast," "Aladdin," "Cinderella" and "Frozen."

These new and improved films will be live-action. The people won't be real but the movies will look more than real.

These films are slated to release in 2022 due to Disney's latest investment—the purchase of the entire United States territory.

The deal was struck between Walt Disney's frozen head and U.S. President Donald Trump. The exact details of the deal have yet to be released, however Sen. Mark Ruffalo gave a summary in an interview with Not Fake News.

"It seems President Trump managed to get the United States debt free; no small feat for one president," Sen. Ruffalo told NFN. "Trump kept saying he did it, he made the best trade deal in history or something along those lines."

Trump commented on the deal in a tweet he sent right after the meeting took place.

"I am simply the greatest president of all time. No other president has ever done a trade deal as good as this," Trump tweeted. The tweet has received many negative responses, calling out Trump's ego and poor grammar.

In a recent video call with CEO Robot Mickey Mouse, Mouse clarified how the purchase may impact the United States. Mouse said that the U.S. government will remain the same, except future presidents can only be Disney princesses created before 2005.

Mouse said the State of the Union speeches will be much more interesting to listen to.

Additionally, all unused U.S. land will be turned into a mono-rail-connected Disneyland.

Disneyland will be rebranding to Disneyhorizon. The ultimate goal of Disneyhorizon will be employment for every citizen with exclusive benefits and bonuses.

Although Robot Mickey Mouse is proposing many changes, it appears that, for the most part, nothing will change that much.

Top of page: New Disney CEO, Robot Mickey Mouse, waves to his employees. PUBLIC DOMAIN.

Above: Former Disney CEO Bob Iger. PHOTO COURTESY: Josh Hallett